Effective in-company training materials, specifically those categorized as "9B," should go beyond basic grammar and vocabulary. They need to bridge the gap between intermediate and advanced proficiency, equipping learners with the practical skills needed in their specific professional context. Key features include:

- Relevance to Workplace Scenarios: The materials must directly relate to the learners' daily work lives. Instead of generic examples, they should use industry-specific jargon, case studies, and simulated business situations. For example, a module on negotiation might involve role-playing a contract negotiation within the company's specific industry.
- Focus on Advanced Language Skills: Materials at the upper-intermediate level (9B) should focus on improving fluency, accuracy, and sophisticated language use. This includes complex sentence structures, nuanced vocabulary, and the ability to express subtle meanings effectively. This could involve exercises focused on advanced grammar points like participial phrases or the use of advanced vocabulary related to financial reports.
- Interactive and Engaging Activities: Passive learning is ineffective. These materials should incorporate a variety of interactive activities such as group discussions, simulations, presentations, and problem-solving exercises. For example, a module on business presentations could culminate in each participant delivering a mini-presentation to their peers.
- Opportunity for Personalized Learning: Learners should have opportunities to focus on their individual strengths and weaknesses. This could involve self-assessment tools, personalized feedback, and opportunities for targeted practice. This might include online modules that provide customized exercises based on the learner's individual performance on diagnostic tests.
